To this end, interregional cooperation should seek to:

POLICY BACKGROUND

relevant place in the international community and in the knowledge economy, aims to provide the human resources necessary to achieve this goal.

The Regional Conference on Higher Education in Latin America and the Caribbean 2018, in line with Sustainable Development Goal 4 of the 2030 Agenda adopted by UNESCO, established the need to “ensure inclusive, equitable and quality education” to advance in social and economic transformations that enable the region’s countries and citizens to develop the knowledge, competencies and skills necessary to effectively integrate into a complex and uncertain global dynamic.

The Declaration of the 3rd Ministerial Meeting on Education of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (CELAC) agreed on the configuration of a “regional space for higher education as an instance of academic integration and solidarity-based cooperation that facilitates dialogue and synergies with extra-regional partners—with special emphasis on South–South cooperation—in close collaboration with the Latin American and Caribbean Space for Higher Education (ENLACES), to advance with the agreements proposed in the framework of the Regional Conferences on Higher Education in Latin America and the Caribbean.”
